

Delivering online proctoring solutions during challenging times

Questionmark, which joined the Learnosity family in 2021, is a leading assessment platform that helps government agencies, businesses, professional associations, and academic institutions test and prove knowledge.

Trusted by the largest organizations in the world, Questionmark is secure, inclusive, and flexible, making it the best solution for proctored exams, certification, and global learning programs.

Designed to become a seamless component of any learning ecosystem, Questionmark can integrate with Learning Management and Learning Experience Platforms, using common standards such as LTI, AICC, SCORM, and xAPI. It also offers a suite of API capabilities to support in-house integrations.

With Questionmark already being established leaders in online assessments and services — including proctoring, test authoring, reporting and more— it was crucial to keep expanding on their partner relationships in order to ensure they were delivering to as many clients as possible. With the increased demands in recent years, this need to expand and integrate with more L&D partners was critical to customer success.

THE CHALLENGE

As people shifted away from physical test centers in droves (which have long been deemed an inconvenient and inflexible environment for tests) the demand for online solutions hit an all-time high. Being established in this space for many years, Questionmark had the expertise of delivering online solutions that were secure, cost-effective and flexible, and so instead focused on scaling their business. To do this, Questionmark sought out partnerships with leading online proctoring companies like Examity.

THE SOLUTION

By partnering with Examity, Questionmark was able to offer organizations the ability to deliver certification and other tests to candidates from their home or office, rather than requiring them to travel to test centers. Increasingly IT certification providers and awarding bodies are keen to be agile and to deliver tests globally at times and places that suit their candidates. This partnership was and is critical for Questionmark to support our customer needs, with a good balance of convenience and security.
